Ladies and gentleman, we will be landing in 20 minutes, On behalf of the captain and crew we hope you have a great trip!

Those immortal words are often the start of nightmares for some people. Jet lag, or desynchronosis as its known in the medical world, is a physiological condition which results from alterations to the body's circadian rhythms, resulting from rapid long-distance trans-meridian (east-west or west-east) travel. For example, someone travelling from New York to London can feel as if the time were five hours earlier than local time.

Jet lag was previously classified as one of the circadian rhythm sleep disorders. The condition of jet lag can last several days before the traveller is fully adjusted to the new time zone; a recovery period of one day per time zone crossed is used as a guideline. Jet lag is especially an issue for airline pilots, crew, and frequent travellers. Before the arrival of passenger jet aircraft, it was uncommon to travel far and fast enough to cause the symptoms. Travel by propeller aircraft, by ship or by train was slower and of more limited distance than jet flights, and thus did not contribute widely to the problem, however, jet lag can also occur in short domestic flights where there is only a small time-zone difference, if combined with long time travelling by car, especially between evening and early morning.

Apparently there's a new way to reset your body clock and go the distance without using harsh prescription medication, its called Jet

Candy. Unbeknown to me, a select clique of time-poor, travel-weary fliers has been in the know, and using the Jet-Candy formula with great success for some time.

So how does it work? I hear you asking.

As well as allowing the internal body clock to function during long-haul, Jet-Candy helps with dehydration, fatigue, disorientation, mental sharpness and other symptoms. The remedy comes in a travel-sized dispenser with a practical pill distributor cap, perfect for carry-on, which you can tap, twist and take on the go. Each bottle contains approx 100 pillules, sufficient for eight intercontinental flights, each one handmade to be a 100% homeopathic remedy developed by one of the most well known homeopaths around, containing sucrose, arnica, bellis perennis, cocculus, gelsemium and petroleum.

Thomas Hedman, International film distributor, commented. "Jet-Candy is the only jet lag remedy that has ever worked for me. As a frequent flyer between London and Los Angeles over many years, I had a constant problem with jet lag and I found no remedy on the market. Once tested, I never looked back as for the first time ever, I travelled without suffering any symptoms. The most significant part was the total absence of sleep problems on the return to London after a week in LA. It's always at hand now."

Michael Reeves, International interior designer, said. "Long haul flights between India, London and China make me quite unwell and the thought of travel worried me. Then I was given Jet-Candy to try, I had nothing to lose. This is a seriously incredible remedy. I never leave the tarmac without it"

Bruce Milani Gallieni, underwater photographer and travel writer, said. "Travelling to the most remote places on the globe involves crossing many time zones and having Jet-Candy at hand is absolutely essential for before, during and after your travel. I don't go anywhere without it as it allows me to function without delays." And finally Pam Bristow, International brand consultant and CMO, told us "There's nothing as dreaded as the business meeting hours after landing from a transcontinental red-eye. Aside from battling plane air, food trolleys and crowded cabins for a few winks, there is the mental fog. You fight it with pots of coffee and a cold showers to no avail. Unacceptable when you have to be "on." Enter Jet-Candy. It gives you back your best self. A total reset. Day or night. It's as essential as your passport."

If you would like to try it for yourself its available from www.jet-candy.com for £ 12.99 or $ 17.00.
